DETAILED ACTION

1. The following is a quotation of 35 U.S.C. 103(a) which forms the basis for all obviousness rejections set forth in this Office action:

(a) A patent may not be obtained though the invention is not identically disclosed or described as set forth in section 102 of this title, if the differences between the subject matter sought to be patented and the prior art are such that the subject matter as a whole would have been obvious at the time the invention was made to a person having ordinary skill in the art to which said subject matter pertains. Patentability shall not be negated by the manner in which the invention was made.

2. Claims 1-34 are rejected under 35 U.S.C. 103(a) as being unpatentable over Chen (6697550). For claims 1, 12, 20, 22, 25, 32, Chen in figs. 4A-4C and in col. 2, line 37 describes an electro-optical prism that steers a beam of light depending on the voltage applied (see also col. 4, lines 15-20) but does not specifically refer to an array of electrode pads. However, in col. 7, lines 14-35 there is a discussion of a deflector that has multiple voltages that can be applied and therefore multiple pads. It would have been obvious to one of ordinary skill in the art to use an array of pads in the deflecting bulk crystal because then one could apply varying voltages which would give flexibility in how much to bend the beam. In col. 2, line 37, Chen discusses various material used in the crystal, for example, lithium niobate. The shape of the crystal and the direction of the beam are design choices that one skilled in the art would choose depending on the system requirements and can be found by routine experimentation.
